DOD implements mandatory anthrax vaccinations for high-threat deployments

BY HOLLY L. BIRCHFIELD
holly.birchfield@robins.af.mil

A new Department of Defense policy, implemented March 19 in accordance with DOD and Air Force guidance, is calling for Airmen with orders to or those currently in areas of high threat for anthrax get vaccinated against the deadly bacteria.

High-threat areas for anthrax include primarily the Central Command Area of Responsibility and the Korean Peninsula, said Lt. Col. Todd Shull, Air Force Counter-Biological Warfare Division chief.

The DOD determined these forwarded areas pose the highest threat for military forces so they must meet the mandatory anthrax vaccine measures. Additionally, individuals in designated special mission units, regardless of location, are also subject to mandatory anthrax vaccination.

"The second key piece of the program is the voluntary aspect of the AVP," Colonel Shull said. "This involves Airmen who have received at least one anthrax vaccine dose since 1998. Under the new guidelines, they can elect to continue getting the anthrax vaccinations in accordance with the dosing schedule whether or not they are (or will be) assigned to a designated high-threat area."

Col. Jim McClain, 78th Medical Group commander, said the anthrax vaccine program is an important one.

"We all need to remember that the biological threat as well as the chemical threat is very real, both within the CENTCOMAOR and in other areas as well," he said. "So, as a result of that, the Anthrax Vaccination Program has great value for our troops here at Robins Air Force Base and other personnel."

Col. Ricky Cook, 78th Dental Squadron commander, said the policy affects individuals who will be deploying for

Robins technical sergeant earns AF Transportation NCO award

BY HOLLY L. BIRCHFIELD

Tech. Sgt. William "Bill" Geiger knows how to get things moving – it's his job.

The noncommissioned officer, who has served as the unit training manager for the 78th Logistics Readiness Squadron for the last five months, was recently named as the 2006 Air Force Transportation NCO of the Year.

Sergeant Geiger stays on top of his job of ensuring about 154 Airmen get the training they need to keep the mission moving, both at home and in lands hundreds of thousands of miles away.

The 37-year-old Warren, Mich., native entered the Air Force in December 1989, getting his start in the security forces career field. But, not long into his military career, the enlisted Airman changed direction and became a vehicle operator at Minot Air Force Base, N.D., driving wreckers, tractor trailers, fork lifts and anything else that had wheels and a motor.

In the nearly 15 years he has been in the transportation field, Sergeant Geiger has been here and there to get Airmen where they need to be.

"I've been deployed to several locations (doing) something kind of similar to the duty that we're doing now within Kosovo, Bosnia, Macedonia and Cuba," he said. "I've been deployed to Italy, and that was probably only my ninth deployment that I've had in my entire career. (I've been to) Saudi Arabia and I've been to Al Udeid once briefly. I was there when the war first started."

As the War on Terrorism began, Sergeant Geiger pulled Air Force assets off of ships as they came into designated locations, staged them and worked on getting them moved and

New Robins commissary plans take shape

By AMANDA CREEL
amanda.creel.ctr@robins.af.mil

Patrons of the Robins commissary could be shopping in a new facility as early as August 2008.

The contract for a new commissary at Robins is expected to be awarded May 1, and construction could begin as early as mid May, said Scott Sisson, an architect and project manager for the Defense Commissary Agency.

"If everything goes according to plan, in mid to late August 2008, patrons will be shopping in the new store. However, a little construction may still be going on when the store first opens," Mr. Sisson said.

The construction project will differ from a standard construction project, in order to keep the existing commissary open for business during the 18-month construction process. Construction crews will spend the first three months doing nothing but site work.

"In standard construction, you build the buildings and then you build the parking lots. It will be a little backwards from the typical construction project," said Larry Allen, community planner, who has helped with the plans of the proposed commissary since November of 2002.

Above, is an artist's rendering of what the new Robins Commissary will look like. The facility may be open as early as August 2008.

Since the new commissary will be built on the existing facility's parking lot, the first step will be to build a temporary parking area for shoppers.

Once temporary parking is established, construction on the new parking lot will begin, and once the new parking lot is completed, construction of the commissary facility can begin, Mr. Sisson said.

Although this may mean greater walking distances during the construction period, commissary patrons will find it was worth the wait when the new facility opens.

According to Mr. Allen, the new commissary will be on the same level as its parking lot. This means the travel distance to the first parking space will be shorter at the new facility without breaking force-protection standards, and with no ramps to travel, it will mean easier trips from the check-out lanes to the parking lot.

Once the new commissary opens, there will be other advantages to the location of the parking lot. For example, the new parking area will allow shoppers to cross directly from the commissary to the Base Exchange, said Mr. Allen. Plus, the new facility boasts a larger retail space by about 30 percent compared to the existing commissary.

"Instead of having large warehouse areas, there will be more products on the floor," Mr. Allen said.

Enthusiasm for the new commissary project is unbridled. Brenda Wilson, an Air Force spouse, said she has been looking forward to more news about the addition of the new commissary since she first heard about it more than a year ago.

"I think that it will be awesome and I am ready for it," Mrs. Wilson said. She said she hopes her husband's Air Force career and a possible permanent change of station doesn't hinder her from seeing it open its doors.

Although commissary patrons like Mrs. Wilson are looking forward to a new and larger facility, many will miss the charm of shopping at the current Robins commissary.

Friendships can be formed as customers maneuver up and down the aisles without going against the traffic arrows. The traffic arrows fixed on the floors of the aisles are a commandment few break without the urge to apologize repeatedly to their fellow shoppers.

The charm doesn't end with the policing of traffic flow; shoppers can be found trading coupons or leaving soon-to-expire coupons for the shoppers who pass behind them. The kindred spirit of the commissary patron can also be seen as others help one another reach the top shelf or the bottom shelf all the way in the back where a much needed item seems to tease the shopper.

However, despite the charm of the current commissary, few complaints can be found as the new commissary forecasts are finally shaping up to be a reality. The promise of wider aisles, larger retail space and a newer facility can put a smile on any commissary patron's face.

"I like the idea of no arrows, especially if people are still courteous," said Tech. Sgt. Angel Waymer with the 116th Operation Support Squadron. "I know they (the arrows) are for convenience, but if you're trying to run in and out it makes it more complicated."

Rodney Shipp, a retired Airman, and his wife, Valang, said they are looking forward to a bigger shopping area and wider aisles. They said they hope the changes result in more selection throughout the store especially in the produce area.

blan can with my family because I leave home so much. I've kind of missed out on a lot of stuff that they've done growing up because I'm gone 10 months a year pretty much on average. So, whatever time that I have allotted, I dedicate totally to my family."

Tech. Sgt. Jody Mohler, NCOIC of Dispatch Support for the 78th LRS, who has called Sergeant Geiger friend and co-worker since 2003, said he can always count on his comrade on and off the clock.

"Professionally, he's definitely one of a kind," he said. "If I needed anything, he'd be the first guy I'd go to. I wouldn't go to my supervisor or anybody like that. I would contact this man right here first because I know he can get the job done. I know I can rely on him whether it's military needs or something in my personal life or whatever, I can always rely on Sergeant Geiger for it."

include small arms, chemical warfare, seven-level schools, career development courses, academies and technical schools.

Sometimes getting everyone trained can be a challenge, as deployments and other taskings pull people in different directions. But Sergeant Geiger handles it with a steady hand.

"I make sure folks are completely qualified before they deploy or PCS to their next duty station, assure people are attaining their next skill level within the allotted time frame, whether it be five level or seven level," he said.

When he's not at work, he's working hard to make life the best it can be for Debra, his wife of 18 years, and their children, DeeAnna, 17; Kayla, 15; and Amanda, 10.

"I hunt. I fish. I get involved in whatever my kids are doing at school," he said. "I just try to spend as much time as I possimore than 15 days to Korea and other areas of Southwest Asia.

Lt. Col. (Dr.) Mike Bledsoe, who specializes in occupational medicine in the 78th Aerospace Medicine Squadron, said the number of individuals affected by the new vaccine policy may vary at Robins.

"In any given month, we usually end up deploying as many as 200 or 300 people and all of those people, if they're not up to date on anthrax, will have to have the vaccination before they actually depart," he said.

Colonel McClain said potentially anyone in a deployable situation or making a permanent change of station to the Korean Peninsula could be affected by the vaccine program.

Pat Tooley, lead health specialist in the Public Health Flight in the 78th MDG, said the vaccine isn't a one shot deal. "It's a six-shot series over 18 months and then it's an annual booster thereafter," she said.

Colonel Cook said ideally, Airmen receive a minimum of three shots before they go, receiving an initial shot, another shot in two weeks, and shots at the four-week, six-month and 18-month marks, followed by an annual booster shot.

If Airmen do not complete the series of the anthrax vaccine, Colonel McClain said the series must be completed in the AOR.

Doctor Bledsoe said the shot is intended to keep Airmen safe when in harms way of the bacteria.

"The concern is that anthrax, which is bacteria, can be weaponized and can become an infection in the lungs," he said. "That infection is almost always fatal if untreated. The anthrax vaccine provides protection from infection in case people are exposed."

Colonel Cook said the 78th

WHAT TO KNOW

For more information on the local implementation of the anthrax vaccine, contact the Public Health Flight in the 78th Medical Group, at 327-7613. Information on the anthrax vaccine can also be obtained by visiting the Military Vaccine Agency's Web site at <http://www.vaccines.army.mil/> or MilVax Anthrax Web site at <http://www.anthrax.mil>.

Medical Group currently has adequate doses of the vaccine on hand for those that require it and individuals who need the shot will be identified by their commanders.

"Once individuals are identified by their commanders, they are then scheduled over here to start receiving their vaccinations in the (necessary) intervals," he said.

The vaccination is now a requirement on the standard pre-deployment checklist, Colonel McClain said. Shots will be given up to 60 days prior to deployment.

Colonel Cook said the medical group has set up a database that tracks which individuals have had the vaccine. The database is available for commanders to help them better manage their Airmen's needs in this area.

Colonel McClain said that Airmen can volunteer to have the shot, which can be given on a voluntary-basis at the Immunization Clinic.

"For those that have already received vaccinations, they can volunteer to get the shot as well, and I just volunteered to get my sixth shot so I've got the full series done now," he said.

Colonel McClain said his group is fully prepared to implement the vaccine program.

Robins is working to keep Airmen informed about the vaccine, Doctor Bledsoe said.

"Because there have been concerns for the safety of the vaccine among those who received it in the past, education about the risks of anthrax and about the very low potential risks of receiving the vaccine that educational piece is a very important part," he said. "Everybody who comes over for the vaccine will be given a tri-fold that has information about the vaccine and a little bit about the disease and is given an opportunity to speak with a healthcare provider about any concerns they may have in terms of receiving the vaccine."

Doctor Bledsoe said the vaccine is a safe, effective tool that's intended to protect against a deadly illness; however, the medical group wants to make sure that people's concerns are addressed. Base healthcare providers are being educated as well to ensure they give proper information about the vaccine.

Implementation is in the initial stages and the Air Force has established a four-week timeframe, upon unit notification, for units to begin giving the anthrax vaccine to Airmen meeting the mandatory guidelines, Colonel Shull said.

The anthrax vaccine was first licensed in the United States in 1970. Since then, it has been given to those who could get exposed to environmental sources of anthrax such as service members, veterinarians, farmers and woolworkers, Colonel Shull said.

In December 2005, the anthrax vaccine was found to be safe and effective against all forms of anthrax, including inhalation anthrax.

Colonel Shull said the anthrax vaccination is just as safe as other vaccinations given over the course of people's lives.

VDATS makes avionics testers universal

BY HOLLY L. BIRCHFIELD
hollybirchfield@robins.af.mil

Robins is making avionics equipment testers universal to all aircraft components to keep the mission flowing.

On March 30, the 402nd Electronics Maintenance Group and the 402nd Software Maintenance Group delivered the first three of 10 Versatile Depot Automatic Test Stations to avionics shops here. The test stations will enable technicians to test multiple avionics components using a common configuration that spans all workloads.

The new testers, which will replace former testers with an average age of 24 years, are now ready to be used by the 402nd SMXG to develop test programs and continue with in-depth self-tests and software development.

Dempsey Ventress, director of the Support Engineer Element of the 402nd EMXG, said the delivery is a milestone in the multi-million dollar project that will deliver 40 testers by fiscal 2009.

"We began planning for a common tester in early 2000, and we developed the Common Core Tester concept, which basically says we've got a common core set of instruments in a tester and we started out with just a digital analogue tester for getting RF (radio frequency) and radar, which is a big portion of what we repair here at the avionics depot."

Shortly after, Air Force Materiel Command put out a policy on transformation projects at Air Force depots. The idea was to create a concept that improves the way business is currently done, Mr. Ventress said. The new concept tests avionics units like black boxes and circuit cards.

Walter Blount, Automatic Test Equipment engineer and project lead for VDATS in the 402nd EMXG, said Robins is building a radio frequency auxiliary bay that tests radars, electronic warfare systems and anything that needs radio frequency.

"We're building two different testers, the digital analogue version and a radio frequency version," he said. "It's (the RF tester) geared toward testing electronic warfare stuff like black boxes that go on some of our aircraft."

The RF bay plugs into the basic tester and is usable with any digital analogue tester, Mr. Blount said.

Bob Pennington, 402nd Software Maintenance Squadron, lead engineer, said while his squadron's people hadn't had previous experience with the concept, they are using their combined engineering experience of more than 20 years to support the mission.

"We're developing the self-test software, the calibration software, tech orders, the drawings, basically all of the support documentation and software that goes with the tester," he said. "The initial design was done by a combination of the 402nd EMXG folks and 402nd SMXG folks."

The VDATS Program Office, located within the 742nd Combat Sustainment Group, provided acquisition support for all instrumentation for the project.

Mr. Ventress said with a basic core analogue tester, Robins estimates it could test about 80 percent of what is tested in the depot with just one two-bay configuration and fund it through the normal procurement process.

The Common Core Tester concept was briefed to Nelson Gibbs, former U.S. Air Force official, in August 2002, and the project was submitted as a Transformation Project in 2003.

Mr. Ventress said AFMC liked the transformation project so much it promised $52 million to implement the Common Core Test concept. All work on the project is being done in-house, which will save the Air Force thousands of dollars. Robins will save even more money in training costs, since employees will have to be trained on only one tester.

Mr. Ventress said Robins plans to have eight digital analogue testers and two radio frequency testers delivered this year. Through fiscal 2009, 31 digital analogue testers and 11 radio frequency bays are expected to be completed.

"America's finest young men and women from all walks of life are drawn to the Air Force, and we celebrate the diversity, passion and perspective they bring. If we wish to continue dominating the domains of Air, Space and Cyberspace throughout the 21st century, we simply must recruit, develop and retain America's best, regardless of their background. Only by leveraging all the talents of the citizens of this great nation will our Total Force continue to excel. Talent does not discriminate among any category of people, and neither can we." — Michael W. Wynne, Secretary of the Air Force

Inching along the narrow trail

Tech. Sgt. Melanie Adams climbs a mountain March 30 near Kabul, Afghanistan, called the "Ghar." Making the climb is a long-standing tradition for servicemembers deployed to Kabul. Sergeant Adams is a news team videographer deployed to Southwest Asia.

Sometimes its OK to say no

"I'm sorry, but no." There, I said it. It wasn't easy and it was something I really hated to do. It meant having to swallow my pride and admit it was something we just couldn't do. There just weren't enough hours in the day or wasn't enough money to get it done, let alone get it done the right way.

In all my years in the Air Force, one of the toughest things to say is "no." It meant, "We give up." It admitted defeat.

One admirable quality about those in uniform is we're stubborn, hardheaded folks. Despite the overwhelming challenges ahead of us, we move forward to get the job done no matter what it takes. We do not like to tell anyone, "It just can't be done."

However, we have to accept the facts. By October, we'll lose 22,000 people Air Force-wide with more to follow over the next four years. Deployment requirements will not go away, meaning those left behind need to pick up the slack. Those who don't deploy still need to get the job done while the rest of their folks are gone. The local mission still needs to happen.

But how? We must leverage technology and eliminate unnecessary processes now more than ever before in our past. We need to continue to find better ways to do the same high-quality job with fewer people — finding ways to get the job done faster, better and cheaper. The notion of "but we've always done it that way" won't fly in the Air Force anymore (pun fully intended).

The Air Force's senior leadership knows we're losing people, and they understand we must be realistic and cut things we simply can't do. In fact, leadership has asked for our inputs, and it's time we are brutally honest about what we really can and cannot do. We need to step up, put our pride in check and honestly say what we can and can't do with fewer people in our shops and work centers.

However, that doesn't mean we stop doing things without justification. It means looking at everything we do each duty day and asking some tough questions.

- ▶ What do we do every day? It's best to write it out.
- ▶ Why do we do it, and is there any value added to our mission? In short, does it help the Air Force put bullets and bombs on target?

▶ Is this the best way to finish the task? Is there someone out there with a smarter, faster, cheaper way to do it?

▶ If it's an unnecessary task, did we send strong justification up the chain of command requesting we stop doing it?

You'd be surprised where you'll find great time and money-saving ideas. Take security forces for example. Earlier this month, the base joined other Air Force installations to eliminate military vehicle decals on the windshields of our private vehicles. It simply made sense. The Air Force spent at least $750,000 a year just to print the stickers. That doesn't include the hundreds or thousands of man hours the base spent issuing the stickers and registering vehicles.

In the words of Maj. Gen. David Clary, ACC vice commander, "The Air Force has been strictly adhering to 100 percent credential checks at installation gates since 9/11, making the check of a vehicle decal unnecessary. Additionally, vehicle owners are more efficiently tracked through state license plates; not military decal numbers."

It's important we identify and refine the way we do business and eliminate unnecessary tasks before we "broke the bank." It's past time for offices and shops across the base to take a long, hard look at everything they do and then find and eliminate the time and money wasting steps and procedures.

Still stuck? Ask your counterparts at other bases, especially those who earned accolades during their unit compliance inspections. Ask them what makes them so good, and feel free to use their good ideas as a benchmark.

Positive leadership and support is a must. If leaders approach this negatively, so will their troops, and then we're back to square one. We all have a vested interest in this, so let's make it count.

At first, it'll be frustrating and maybe a bit time consuming. However, we're quickly running out of options as we continue to lose people. We need to step up and make the tough calls and back them up 100 percent — because sometimes "no" is the right answer. — This commentary was written by Chief Master Sgt. Norman Peck, 366th Mission Support Squadron.

Flightline reporting times

Has any thought been given to changing the flight line duty hours back to 7 a.m. to 3:45 p.m.? Lately there's been a lot of talk about some of the anxiety and stress related to having to get up so early in the morning. I know some people drive from the Statesboro and Atlanta areas. It makes a long day for those who live right around here. People are exhausted, tired and stressed by the end of each week.

Colonel Carter's Response

After Sept. 11, 2001, increased security measures created a traffic jam at the base entrance gates. Due to implementation of 100 percent identification checks, Battle Staff Directive Number 99, dated March 26, 2002, was issued to rearrange all units' work shift times to alleviate heavy traffic congestion at gate entrances, and BSD Number 114, dated Nov. 6, 2003, continued the Maintenance Directorate (now the 402nd Maintenance Wing) employees' reporting time. This is where the current day shift reporting time of 6 a.m. for aircraft maintenance employees is derived. Although this early shift is no doubt very difficult for some employees to accommodate, others have adapted to it quite well. Those employees with extenuating circumstances can request shift deviations for hardships. We will continue to monitor this issue for any future trends or options.

Green Street Gate parking

While entering the base through the Green Street gate, I noticed there are several automobiles parked in the grassy area on the right hand side of First Street, just before passing Bldg 34. Has this grassy area been designated as an overflow parking area?

Colonel Carter's Response

Thanks for bringing up a valid concern. This area has not been designated as an overflow parking area. We are aware parking is scarce in this area; however, there is plenty of available parking in the lot at the First Street and Page Road intersection. Security Forces is aware of this problem and will be conducting selective enforcement and ticketing illegally parked vehicles.

NSPS salary increases within paybands and reassignments

Q. How can an employee's salary increase within the same pay band?

A. Pay progression within the band can be accomplished in a variety of ways and is affected by employee performance and contribution to the organization's mission. When an employee changes position within the same or comparable pay band under NSPS, it is considered a reassignment. Employees are no longer bound by narrow work definitions tied to discrete grade levels. NSPS gives employees the flexibility to move more easily to other positions and enhances opportunities for career growth and development. Here are examples of how an employee's salary can increase within the same pay band:

▶ Performance-based increase—A performance-based increase is tied to the annual performance rating and is added to base salary. Employees are eligible to receive a performance-based increase if they have a rating of record of Level 3 (valued performer) or higher.

▶ Reassignment—A reassignment occurs when an employee moves, voluntarily or involuntarily, to a different position or set of duties within his or her pay band or to a position in a comparable pay band. A reassignment may result in a pay increase up to five percent. This increase is discretionary and must be administered fairly and within Component guidelines.

▶ Rate Range Adjustment—A rate range adjustment is an increase to the minimum or maximum of the pay band that is adjusted based on market drivers. Employees are eligible to receive a rate range adjustment if they have a rating of record of Level 2 (fair) or higher.

▶ Local Market Supplement—An LMS adjustment is an additional payment to employees in specified local market areas, occupations, specializations, or pay bands. LMSs are added to base salary. Employees are eligible for an LMS adjustment if they have a rating of record of Level 2 (fair) or higher.

▶ Accelerated Compensation for Developmental Positions—ACDP may be used to provide an increase to employee base salary, a bonus, or a combination of these. It only applies to employees in Pay Band 1 who are participating in Component developmental programs.

Q. Can employees receive a pay increase when reassigned to a different position?

A. Yes, under NSPS, employees have the opportunity to affect their pay based on performance and the opportunities they seek for promotions and reassignments.

▶ Employee-initiated reassignment: May receive up to a cumulative five percent in base salary in a 12-month period, no matter how many times the employee is voluntarily reassigned that year.

▶ Management-directed reassignment: May receive up to 5 percent in base salary for each reassignment. There is no limit to the number of times employee can receive a management-directed reassignment.

▶ Voluntarily move to a lower pay band: Base salary must be set within the assigned pay band. Management may increase base salary up to five percent (not to exceed the maximum of the rate range).

Robins youth win at AF Family, Teen Talent Show

BY HOLLY L. BIRCHFIELD
holly.birchfield@robins.af.mil

Local teens didn't have to go on American Idol to have their talents discovered.

Their dreams of being center stage were realized right here – at the 2006 Air Force Family and Teen Talent Show.

Several Robins stars stood out in the crowd in their areas of competition. Emily Wallace, a local dancer and 11-year-old daughter of Lt. Col. Dawn Wallace with the Air Force Reserve Command headquarters, and the Christian rap group "Movement of Truth," made up of sixteen and seventeen-year-old teens Marc Anthony Freeman, Jamaal Jones, and Xavier Adams, all of whom are sons of Robins' active-duty and retired military members, took top honors in their respective categories at the Air Force-level talent competition.

Lynne Brackett, director of the Smith Community Center at Robins, said the climb to the top for the individual and the group started in front of a video camera at the Robins community center on Sept. 22. Videotapes of their performances were then submitted to the Air Force-level talent competition.

"For each performer (or group) who received first place in their category, or someone who scored really high, we videotaped them and sent them up to the Air Force-level (competition)," she said. "The Services Agency gets folks from Air Force Entertainment to review the videotapes and they bring in vocalists and dancers and people who are very knowledgeable about what they're watching and looking at to judge all of the videotapes."

About 240 videotapes were submitted from 47 Air Force bases world-wide for the competition, Mrs. Brackett said.

Emily, who started clogging when she was about 7, said she loves to dance.

"I love to perform on stage,

and I also love to make people smile," she said. "Probably one of the most favorite things I like to do when I dance is enjoy myself and have good expression and make the dance me."

The energetic pre-teen said she was thrilled to do some fancy footwork for the show.

"My mom told me about it, and she told me that if I made Air Force-level, I could dance with Tops in Blue," she said. "So she talked me into doing it and once I did it, I really enjoyed it."

Her mother, Lt. Col. Dawn Wallace, chief of Program Change Requests and Program Development for the AFRC, said her and Emily's father, Mark Wallace, a retired U.S. Coast Guard commander and a current Southwest Airlines pilot, are very proud of their daughter.

"We are just extremely proud of Emily," she said. "She took an interest in dance when she was about 3 years old and it's the only thing she's ever wanted to do. We've tried to introduce her to other activities, as all parents do to have well-rounded kids, and dance has always been what she's wanted to do."

Colonel Wallace said her daughter invests 12 hours a week in honing her talent and has experience in a variety of dance forms, including tap, jazz, ballet, hip-hop, and clogging. Emily is a member of a dance team at South Flare Studio in Perry, Ga.

Members of Movement of Truth are equally passionate about their music and Christian testimony as reflected in their group's name and lyrics.

"I was looking for a name that personified what I really wanted to put into my music," said Xavier, 16-year-old son of retired Major Reginald and Denise Adams. "I didn't want it to be just music and I didn't want any of it to just be talking. I wanted it to be real and I wanted to be more of a lifestyle. So, I came up with the name Movement of Truth to personify everything and what we're going to try to do."

Marc Anthony, 17-year-old son of Master Sgt. Claudia Lowe, Base Career Assistance Advisor in the 78th Mission Support Squadron, and Master Sgt. Roderic Lowe, a production superintendent and acting first sergeant for the 116th Maintenance Squadron, said the group writes its own lyrics based on their faith and experiences.

"We write our own music because we all have different stories and we all have different points of view on what we think of life so we write what we feel," he said. "We don't really take anybody else's stuff."

Both Emily and Movement of Truth will perform on stage with Tops in Blue when the group performs at the Warner Robins Civic Center Oct. 6.

Movement of Truth will also have the opportunity to go to Missoula Performing Arts Camp in Montana in early summer.

Parents of the group members said they are excited to see their kids talents recognized and look forward to what their future will bring.

Motorcycle, ATV training changes ensure operators ride safely

BY HOLLY L. BIRCHFIELD
holly.birchfield@robins.af.mil

Robins safety experts are improving the way they prepare motorcyclists and all-terrain vehicle users to take to the road or wherever else their travels take them.

From online registration to establishing new training range sites, the motorcycle and ATV training courses are being revamped to provide a better service to riders.

Jerry Morningstar, motorcycle and ATV program administrator and a 78th Air Base Wing Safety Office occupational and health specialist, said the new process puts the training at people's fingertips.

"The individual no longer has to come to our office to sign up for a class for motorcycle and ATV safety training," he said. "They can go directly on the Robins homepage or they can go to the Air Force Portal (and click on) 'My Base,' 'Robins,' and follow the safety link to the 78th Air Base Wing Safety page. There's a place for motorcycle or ATV training and they can register online."

Military retirees and other motorcycle riders who no longer have access to a government computer may get assistance with registration by visiting the 78th ABW Safety office in Bldg. 707.

Mr. Morningstar said people taking the course should fill out the online form available at the site, print the online package, and bring them along when they come to class.

The motorcycle safety training course is offered monthly in the parking lot of Bldg. 905.

Mr. Morningstar said upon registering, individuals will be assigned a class date, whether they're taking the basic course or the experienced rider course.

The basic rider's course is intended for motorcyclists with less than six months riding experience, having only a basic permit. The experienced rider's course is for motorcyclists with six months or more of riding experience that have a motorcycle endorsement on their driver's licenses.

Active-duty military, Department of Defense civilians, contractors, and dependents who operate motorcycles on base must take the Motorcycle Safety Course or have proof of taking the course at another base.

Mr. Morningstar said the training is only required to be taken once. In the near future, however, riders will be required to take refresher training every two years.

ATV riders taking the course here will have new territory to cover.

"ATV training is conducted by the RV (recreational vehicle) storage lot by PAVEPAWS area," Mr. Morningstar said. "It used to be done out at the old Security Forces range, which is now a landfill. We have a brand new range out at the recreational vehicle storage lot owned by Services."

Mr. Morningstar said a new motorcycle training range is being constructed in the PAVEPAWS area which would provide more space, less traffic and fewer distractions for students.

The new training area will include a location dedicated to the Motorcycle Mentorship Program, which started at Robins in 2005. The program involves pairing novice riders with experienced riders who share the same type of motorcycle interests so newcomers can learn from veteran riders.

To clear up any misunderstanding, Robins is making rider's clothing requirement more definitive. Before, the Air Force required riders to wear "contrasting colored upper garments." Now, during daylight hours, riders are expected to wear a brightly colored long-sleeved shirt or brightly colored light jacket along with their personal protective equipment.

Mr. Morningstar said it's highly suggested that riders wear a reflective orange or yellow vest.

Donn Johnson, senior motorcycle safety instructor at Robins and programming analyst with Case LLC Inc. in the 782nd Combat Sustainment Group, said the update to the requirement is good for riders and drivers alike.

"I believe it's going to help the other drivers see the motorcyclists out there during the daytime," he said.

Mr. Johnson said while some riders may see the new requirement as a hassle, it's one worth following.

"You want to be seen when you're out there," he said. "If you're not seen, then you're not doing your part to ensure that the other drivers can see you."

In addition, Mr. Morningstar said it's important to remind riders to have proper documentation, such as their driver's license, base identification card, Motorcycle Safety Foundation card, and proof of insurance and registration.

Mr. Morningstar suggests riders make copies of their Motorcycle Safety Foundation Card and have each copy notarized. Riders should keep their original card filed at home for safe keeping, while maintaining one notarized copy in their training file and another on them at all times.

WHAT TO KNOW

The 78th ABW Safety Office is now taking applications from active-duty military and DOD civilians for the Robins Motorcycle Instructor's Course May 15-24. Riders must present a copy of their motorcycle endorsement on their driver's license and present the last three years of their driving or riding record. After taking the Air Force Safety Center-sponsored course, participants will be rider coaches and able to teach motorcycle safety courses at the base. People must have written permission from their commander or director in order to be excused from duty for the free, two-week course. Individuals will be expected to teach a course every four to six weeks. For more information, call Mr. Morningstar at 926-6271.

U.S. Air Force photos by TECH. SGT. GARY NALE

Sergeant Nale said it was sad as you got closer to this beautiful young girl in Zangalan, Afghanistan, because you could see that her face had weathered harsh elements and had been burned by the sun and wind. "In her face, you could just see the hard life she had ahead of her," Sergeant Nale said.

Recent deployment offers Robins Airman opportunity to use passion for photography

By AMANDA CREEL
amanda.creel.ctr@robins.af.mil

An Air Force tasking turned into an opportunity for Tech. Sgt. Gary Nale to put his passion for photography to good use.

Sergeant Nale was pursuing photography as a career before he decided to don Air Force blue. He hoped to be a combat photographer for the Air Force, but instead found himself working for the Command Post. It was a First Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in lieu of tasking from the Robins Command Post that provided him the chance to provide a snap shot into the lives of many of the Afghans he encountered.

Sergeant Nale was deployed to Afghanistan as part of a 13-person Air Force Brigade support team as the NCO in charge of the Joint Operations Center. He spent seven months there where the team's main responsibility was running the base, which was located in the heart of Afghanistan, about 50 miles from the Iran border.

"We were there to help free up the Army for more jobs outside the wire," Sergeant Nale said.

The team not only worked with American troops while deployed they also worked with Italian troops, who took command of the base during Sergeant Nale's stint there. When the first Italian operational mentoring and liaison team left Afghanistan, they awarded 15 American troops with Italian Commemorative Crosses and the Army gave 15 Army Commendation Medals to the Italians. Sergeant Nale was one of five members of the Air Force Brigade who received recognition from the Italians.

"I was very proud as NCOIC that five of our people garnered that award," he said.

Regardless of the support team's duties on base, the team was also given the opportunity to participate in non-offensive missions, such as humanitarian missions handing out school supplies, candy or beanie babies donated by fellow Americans. He said once word got out that he was a photographer, he began being asked to go out more frequently.

Other humanitarian efforts he participated in included building new walls for schools and installing water wells for some of the villages.

"You go up to these villages and there is no water, there's no electricity. It's like the pages out of a National Geographic. When they first see the Humvees everyone is running from us, because they are used to the (former enemies) and they generally shot first," he said. "But once we started handing out candy and stuff like that they would just appear out of the wood works."

"We went to a lot of schools in the Harad area, Harad is one of the oldest cities in Afghanistan. It was like the cultural center it never fell to the Russians and it never fell to the Taliban. So we were in a very pro-American and ISAF (International Security Assistance Force) area," Sergeant Nale said. "They like us. They want us there. They are rebuilding and they don't like the Taliban."

He was amazed by the Afghans' attempts to help secure the troops' safety from the Taliban.

"The Taliban would mine the road from the Afghan base we were stationed at to Camp Zafar or Camp Victory and Regional Command West, an ISAF base. They were seven miles apart and RCF was actually an airport, so we would have to travel that road and the Taliban would mine the road dropping anti-tank bombs on it. The villagers driving by would see them and pick them up and they would arrive at Camp Victory with them because they knew they were meant for us," Sergeant Nale said.

He said one of the most rewarding things from his trip was the opportunity to experience life beyond the confines of the base. He said he was truly in Afghanistan; he wasn't just stuck behind the fences of the base.

"I have been on the roads and I have talked to the people," Sergeant Nale said.

However, Sergeant Nale knew it was time to return home when he began to be desensitized to the harsh realities that surrounded him.

"When you first get there it is like 'oh my gosh' and then after a while it becomes like standard stuff," he said.

But on his last mission, he encountered two young girls with no shoes and thin short sleeve dresses as their only protection from the cold temperatures.

"Here I am bundled up in Gortex, freezing, and they are out there with like nothing sitting in the middle of this trash and playing," Sergeant Nale said.

He said this encounter struck home with him and made him think about his own young son and how lucky they are to be Americans.

Sergeant Nale sits surrounded by Afghani children at a site that would soon house the Badam School. "They almost knocked me over. I already had my bulletproof vest and armor on and then I was trying to get down when they all rushed around me," Sergeant Nale said.

Above left, This girl is a student at an all female school Sergeant Nale visited to hand out Beanie Babies donated by Unity Baptist in Bonaire. Because of the country's Muslim background, the sergeant was presently surprised when her teacher allowed the military men to enter and hand out school supplies and gifts.

Above right, During a trip to the Turkmenistan border, Sergeant Nale noticed this young boy shedding tears as he tried to lift the heavy water bottles he had just retrieved from the water hole near the defunct wells. Part of the group's humanitarian mission to the area was to provide new wells to the Afghans who reside there.

Robins seeks solutions to alcohol issues

BY HOLLY L. BIRCHFIELD
hollybirchfield@robins.af.mil

(Editor's note: This is the first article in a two-part series on alcohol-related issues at Robins.)

Robins is working to put a stop to driving under the influence and other alcohol-related incidents involving its military and civilian members.

Robins' Alcohol Issues Working Group, which is comprised of first sergeants, Airmen Against Drunk Driving representatives, Security Forces, Safety and the Base Chapel, tracks the number of DUIs committed by military and civilians on base on a quarterly basis.

According to statistics maintained by the organization, there have been 26 DUI incidents this fiscal year as of April 5.

First Lt. Lynnette Angel, assistant Alcohol and Drug Addiction Prevention Treatment program manager in the 78th Medical Group's Behavioral Health Flight, said the alcohol-related problem is one that's prevalent among 21 to 25-year-olds at bases Air Force-wide.

"Robins is starting to have a little more of a problem," she said. "(It's) not that we're worse than any other base. It's just being focused on a lot more now because we're trying to prevent it from happening and focusing on proactive solutions so that these incidents won't continue to happen."

DUI, underage drinking, and domestic violence incidents caused by alcohol abuse are a few of the issues that have been stumbling blocks at Robins.

While the base aims to have zero alcohol incidents, Lieutenant Angel said that's not possible in reality.

However, the Alcohol Issues Working Group is teaming up with others here to cut the incidents.

Lieutenant Angel said Robins has taken a more personalized approach to educating its people.

Instead of slideshow briefings that focus on statistics and information that most people know and overlook, focused briefings tailor information to meet the individual unit or organization's needs.

The lieutenant said recent focused briefings have addressed binge drinking, the definition of a single alcoholic drink, and the reason binge drinking is so harmful.

ADAPT has presented four focused briefings at commanders' requests since the concept began in February.

In the course of the briefings, the lieutenant said she has noticed that some Airmen don't know the amount of alcohol a mixed drink holds, or that drinking more than 12 ounces of beer means one has had more than one drink.

James Ford, a substance abuse counselor in the ADAPT program, serving in both the military and civilian role since 1970 here, said the base also talks face-to-face with people.

The substance abuse counselor said the conversation centers around how much the person drinks, how their drinking affects those around them, and how drinking may impact their meeting life goals.

Mr. Ford said helping agencies in the Integrated Delivery System are focusing on prevention of the alcohol woes, by edu-

WHAT TO KNOW

Airman Against Drunk Driving
Driving gives military and civilians with base identification cards a free ride home when they've had too much to drink. AADD volunteers are available 24 hours a day, seven days a week at each of the following cellular phone numbers: 335-5238, 335-5236, and 335-5218. People may also contact AADD by dialing 222-0013.

cating alcohol merchants and providing non-alcoholic entertainment options.

Mr. Ford said alcohol issues working groups exist Air Force Materiel Command-wide.

Currently, Robins is working with other bases to find workable solutions to the ongoing alcohol issues, Mr. Ford said.

To make people aware of their alcohol tolerance and susceptibility to alcohol-related problems, the Alcohol Issues Working Group is trying to make a self-assessment test available on government computers on a daily basis.

Mr. Ford said the assessment, provided by the National Institute of Alcoholism and Alcohol Addiction, gives individuals feedback on where they stand with vulnerability to alcohol problems. Assessment results are seen only by the individual.

Mr. Ford said the AIWG meets monthly to find ways to overcome the negative effects of alcohol.
