Military working dog dies defending freedom

BY HOLLY L. BIRCHFIELD
holly.birchfield@robins.af.mil

When Staff Sgt. Marcus Reaves, a military working dog handler in the 78th Security Forces Squadron's Military Working Dog Section at Robins, deployed with his canine partner, Arras, he never imagined he'd come home without him.

Arras, a 5-year-old Dutch sheppard explosives detector and patrol dog in the 78th SFS who was assigned to the 447th Expeditionary Security Forces Squadron and Joint Operations, Sather Air Base, Iraq, was killed when he touched a location that was electrified by power cables during a search for weapons and explosives in a building Sept. 25.

Sergeant Reaves, who had worked with Arras for six months of 18 months the dog served with his unit, said the day started like most days, with a fun-loving game of tug-of-war with his K-9 partner.

"Before I did anything with him, I petted him on top of his head and asked him if he was ready to go to work, and he gave me this look like, 'Let's do it,' he said. "So, I sent him off to work and we were going through clearing buildings. One building we got to was fairly dark so I didn't want to send him in to the point where I couldn't see him."

As the military working dog handler bent down to pick up his flashlight, his faithful partner entered what would be his last mission. Sergeant Reaves was knocked unconscious by the explosion and thrown nearly 30 feet from the site. But, his partner was in a much worse condition.

"I didn't know what was going on," he said. "When I came to, as a handler, my first instinct was, 'Where's my dog?'" I looked all around. I knew the medics were talking to me, but I was just like, 'I don't care what y'all are talking about right now. I just need to find my dog.'"

When faced with the realization that Arras was gone, Sergeant Reaves said it was more than he could handle.

"It was like my world had stopped then and there," he said.

The aircraft was flown to Robins aboard a C-5 Galaxy aircraft from Kelly USA, San Antonio, Texas, Oct. 12 and will be displayed at the Museum of Aviation.

The F-102 made its initial flight Oct. 24, 1953 and became operational with the Air Defense Command in 1956. The F-102 being gained by the museum served with Air Defense Command units at Langley Air Force Base, Va., and Andrews AFB, Md., from 1957 to 1958 and was used at Kelly AFB as a ground trainer until it was retired in 1972. It was the world's first supersonic all-weather jet interceptor and the U.S. Air Force's first operational delta-wing aircraft. Its primary mission was to intercept and destroy enemy aircraft.

Senior enlisted leader visits Robins, discusses AF priorities trained Airmen who are prepared to continue the fight is top priority.

As part of the Air Force Week Georgia celebration, Chief Master Sgt. of the Air Force Rodney J. McKinley recently visited Airmen at Robins Air Force Base, Warner Robins Air Logistics Center and Air Force Reserve Command.

Chief McKinley spoke with several groups and squadrons during the visit. His primary message to the enlisted Airmen is the Air Force has a vision and that vision includes helping Airmen be better prepared to win the war on terrorism.

"The most important thing on our agenda is to make sure we properly organize, train and equip our Airmen to go and do whatever the Air Force tasks them to do for our nation," he said.

The chief said he expects the war on terror is going to last for many, many years and having highly trained Airmen who are prepared to continue the fight is top priority.

"We've got to stay vigilant and keep on fighting the war on terrorism effectively. However, it's not just about the war in Iraq and Afghanistan. It's a global war on terrorism because we have terrorists all around the globe who daily think of ways they can get in here and change our way of life," Chief McKinley said. "I don't think in three to five years we're just going to be able to say we're done - terrorism is over. This is something we're going to be fighting for a long time. This effort takes support from taxpayers, support from Congress, and support from our government to make sure our military is strong enough to win this war on terrorism."

The second priority for the Air Force is developing and caring for Airmen and their families, he said.

GEARING UP Robins readies for 2008 ORI

BY HOLLY L. BIRCHFIELD
holly.birchfield@robins.af.mil

Airmen and civilians alike worked hard this week to ensure Robins was ready to meet the challenge of its Operational Readiness Exercise.

Active-duty military members made sure business affairs such as medical records, wills, and powers of attorney were all in order and that they were up to date on necessary training to prepare them for deployment.

Processing lines and training stations were in place on base to get Airmen what they needed in order to meet the mission in the simulated deployed location at Warrior Air Base during the five-day, two-phase exercise, while Department of Defense civilians served a supporting role in the process.

Wayne Carson, Exercise Evaluation Team chief in the 78th Plans and Programs Office, said it's one of several exercises Air Force Materiel Command organizations at the base will undergo to get ready for the Operational Readiness Inspection to be held at Robins April 12-21.

"(The ORI) is a chance for people to ensure they're prepared for the ORI," he said. "It involves several practices. It's just like most things. You always practice before your big event. So, that's what we do. We practice, practice, practice and then when the ORI comes, we're ready to perform."

Master Sgt. Rich Geister, an exercise evaluator in 78th ABW/XP, said a lot went into preparing for the ORI.

FIT TO FIGHT

Robins will undergo an Operational Readiness Inspection from April 12-21. The base undergoes an ORI every four years. For more information on scheduling and other factors in the upcoming inspection, visit the "2008 WR-ALC Operational Readiness Inspection" link located at the bottom center of the Robins' home page. To submit suggestions for improving the information link, contact Forest Johnson, 78th Air Base Wing Plans and Programs Division chief, at forest.johnson@robins.af.mil.

"We had several training days ahead of the first exercise out at Warrior Air Base," he said. "We pushed through almost 300 people from various organizations across the base to train them in self-aid/buddy care, to train them in chemical warfare, to train them on M-16/M-9 weapons, all of the stuff that they needed to know for the exercise."

Sergeant Geister said any number out of 300 people could be tasked for the ORI.

Mr. Carson said during the ORI, a team of evaluators from the Headquarters AFMC Inspector General Office will look at how Robins processes Airmen who are deploying.

"We look to make sure they have everything they're supposed to have in their bags and all of their records are up to date and training is up to date," he said. "We want to make sure they have a will and a power of attorney is ready so things at home will continue to flow when the individual is deployed."

Forest Johnson, 78th ABW/XP division chief, said wartime

Pharmacy halts distribution of infant cold medicine

BY AMANDA CREEL

amanda.creel.ctr@robins.af.mil

In compliance with an Oct. 11 Consumer Healthcare Products Association recall for over-the-counter oral cough and cold medicines for infants or for use in children under 2 years old the Base Pharmacy pulled PediaCare Infant Drops Decongestant from their shelves. The pharmacy will no longer be dispensing the over-the-counter drug as a prescription, because the pharmacy is required to return the decongestant to its manufacturer as part of the voluntary national recall.

"We are supporting this initiative as an extra measure of safety to ensure unintended overdoses don't cause harm," said Col. James McClain, 78th Medical Group commander.

In response to last week's voluntary national recall, numerous oral over-the-counter infant and cold medicines were withdrawn from pharmacy shelves around the U.S.

However, base pharmacists and Colonel McClain caution parents there is no reason to panic over the recall.

"It is important to remember this is a voluntary recall and there is not a problem with the drug, the concentration or the label," said Debbie Bozeman, base pharmacist. "We don't want to send people into a panic. When you hear the words recall, it sounds toxic, like something is wrong with the drug, but it's not."

She added, "It is completely safe and effective when used as directed."

Julie Reeves, base pharmacist, said because the decongestant was administered only by prescription by base pediatricians and other doctors on the base, the pharmacy staff never experienced any problems with misuse or dosing errors relating to the recalled decongestant.

"It is an administrative error not a drug strength error," Ms. Reeves said.

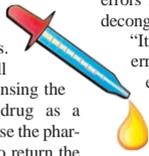

Ms. Bozeman said the manufacturers voluntarily recalled the drug out of their own concern because of some instances of misuse by those administering the drugs not with the drug itself or the label directions.

"We want to be crystal clear to the public. There is not a problem with the product, therefore people should not fear if their children received this product in recent history as long as they complied with the user directions," Colonel McClain said.

Ms. Reeves said it was still important to get the message out about the manufacturers' voluntary recall because it makes parents aware even over-the-counter medications can be hazardous if used inappropriately.

"Parents must read labels and must know what they are giving their children," she said.

For more information about the recall and other over-the-counter medicines affected visit www.OTCSafety.org.

Vaccine, hand washing best guards against flu

BY HOLLY L. BIRCHFIELD

According to base and local health officials, getting the flu vaccine combined with frequent hand washing could significantly cut people's risk for getting the flu this season.

Robins hasn't yet received its shipment of the flu shot, Tech. Sgt. Jack Jenkins, NCO in charge at the 78th Medical Group's Allergy and Immunizations Clinic. The office received a shipment of the flu vaccine nasal spray for active-duty military members in need of the vaccination, but all 1,200 doses have been administered.

Staff Sgt. Robert Wilson, a 78th MDG allergy and immunization technician, said it's mandatory for all active-duty to be vaccinated annually against the flu and highly encouraged for others.

Sergeant Wilson said the clinic will wait until it has 80 percent of the active-duty military vaccinated before its staff opens up its vaccines to military families, military retirees and DOD civilians.

Maj. Heather Johnson, officer in charge at the Allergy and Immunizations Clinic and a nurse practitioner at the Family Medicine Clinic on base, said Robins will begin putting messages about flu vaccines on government computers' splash pages in the near future.

The local community offers civilians a few opportunities to get the flu shot at the Houston County Health Department and at the community center at Rozier Park in Perry, Ga.

Debbie Liby, nurse manager at the Houston County Health Department, said getting vaccinated could help people avoid the aches and pains of the flu.

"The flu shot is highly effective," she said. "Of course, no vaccine is 100 percent, but it's in the 90th percentile."

Mrs. Liby agreed that it's important for everyone to get the flu shot each season.

"Every year, the CDC (Centers for Disease Control) decides which three types of flu are most likely to come to the United States and cause a problem," she said. "Then, they will let the drug manufacturers know (what the) three types are. They then make the vaccine. That's why every year it's a little bit different and you have to get a shot every year."

Pat Tooley, lead health specialist in the Public Health Flight of the 78th MDG's Aerospace Medicine Squadron, said getting the vaccine doesn't guarantee a person won't get the flu.

"You can get another strain of the flu," she said. "(The vaccine) will build up your body's immunity to what's out there the most prevalent, but there's always different types of flu out there."

Mrs. Liby said while other flu strains exist, the flu shot is crafted each year based on the most prevalent strains.

Getting the flu shot is especially important for people who are 50 or older, pregnant women, children who are six months to 5 years old, and anyone who has a chronic disease.

Melinda Asbell, a secretary in the Base Chapel, has received the flu shot for many years. Since she was diagnosed with chronic lymphocytic leukemia in 2006, getting the vaccine is of greater importance.

"(I get the flu shot) because I don't like getting the flu and I'd rather have the shot than the real thing," she said.

Mrs. Asbell said it's a good idea for everyone to get the shot so they don't get others sick.

Mrs. Liby said healthcare and daycare workers as well as people living with those in these high-risk groups should also get the flu shot.

While the flu shot is recommended for most people, it's off limits to those who are allergic to latex products and people who are allergic to eggs. The flu vaccine is grown in sterilized eggs, Mrs. Liby said.

Getting the flu vaccine isn't someone's only defense against the bug.

Mrs. Liby said the solution to staying healthy is in one's own hands.

"Wash your hands," she said. "Avoid places where you know people who are sick are going to be. Unfortunately, that's going to mean (avoiding) stores at busy time periods or doctors' offices or even going to church at times. During the cold and flu season, those people are more susceptible to catch everything."

The nurse manager said people should carry and use hand sanitizer.

"You see people using their hand sanitizers or their handy wipes to clean grocery carts and stuff like that," she said. "It's really a good idea, especially during that time of the year."

Mrs. Liby said coughing or sneezing in one's shoulder instead of their hands is a much better practice for stopping the spread of flu germs.

Also, people should use a paper towel to open public restroom doors after washing their hands to avoid becoming infected, Mrs. Liby said.

HEALTH CLINIC CANCELS FLU LINE

Due to an unexpected delay in the release of further lots of the flu vaccine from the manufacturer, the Allergy and Immunization Clinic has canceled its previously scheduled flu mass immunizations. In addition, the clinic has depleted our entire supply of the flu vaccine. Therefore, there will be no further flu vaccines administered until the supplies are replenished. For readiness purposes, Preventative Health Assessment and Individual Medical Readiness will remain yellow until Dec. 31 and will not turn red until Jan. 1, by which time our supply issue should be resolved.

Sergeant Reaves said Arras was more than a means for finding danger. He was a comfort in the midst of danger.

"The military likes to consider these dogs (as) equipment, and we as handlers try to stay in that mentality," he said. "Yeah, they're equipment and anything could happen at any time. But, when we deploy, those dogs stay with us. We feed them, water them and bring them out to play. When we don't have anyone to talk to, the dog is always right there."

The feeling of loss was also shared by many other 78th SFS members. Staff Sgt. Edward Canell, the 78th SFS trainer who trained with Arras, said losing Arras was like losing a human member of the squadron.

"It's just like losing an Airman for us," he said. "You've got to remember, these dogs don't ask for anything in return. Just a little bit of love and companionship and they'll work for you. They never ask you why or ask you questions. They're always there for you. So, it was hard when we heard we lost him."

Sergeant Canell said Arras was a unique part of his military family.

"There's certain stuff that we can't do physically, where a dog's nose can smell something that we can't even come close to," he said. "So, they're very valuable and there are only a certain number of them. To lose one is a really big loss for us."

Tech. Sgt. David Barber, kennel master in the 78th SFS' Military Working Dog Section, said Arras was just as much a source of protection stateside as he was in the deployed location.

From conducting bomb sweeps at local schools and businesses to supporting the president, vice president, and former president Jimmy Carter, Arras left paw prints on many areas, in the military and civilian community alike, Sergeant Barber said.

Sergeant Canell said he hopes others will see the importance of dogs like Arras.

"I hope that when people read this that they understand these aren't just dogs or animals," he said. "They're members of our military force. They go out and put their lives on the line every day, not just in deployed locations, but also stateside. Everyone that works on base can have a safe feeling because these dogs are at the gate utilizing their noses and sniffing everything that comes through the gate like in a deployed location."

Sergeant Reaves said he'll always remember his four-legged partner as courageous and dedicated.

"Arras was our best dog," he said. "He loved his job. Whoever handled that leash, he loved them. He loved to work and when he was done, he wanted love for it. After he was done working, he was one of those dogs that would come back to you, lick you, wanted you to pet him, and wouldn't leave you alone until you did. I wake up in the morning and of course I thank God for my still being around without being seriously injured. But, he's always in my thoughts."

A memorial service was held in honor of Arras in the deployed location today.

During the ceremony, 447th Air Expeditionary Group commander, Col. Kevin Kriner presented Sergeant Reaves with an achievement medal for his dedicated performance in the line of duty.

Robins will host a memorial service for Arras in the near future.

Political dos and don'ts: Know the Department of Defense guidelines

78TH AIR BASE WING
LEGAL OFFICE

With 2008 being a presidential election year, federal employees should know and follow special guidelines regarding political campaigns. The U.S. Armed Forces have a long-standing tradition of strict neutrality in the electoral process.

Consistent with this tradition, Department of Defense and Air Force policy precludes Air Force members from engaging in any activity that would imply the Air Force or its senior officers have taken an official position on, or are otherwise involved in, a local political issue or campaign. Rules for civilians, instituted by the Hatch Act, and rules for military members, under Air Force Instructions 51-902, were established to ensure impartiality and political neutrality.

Although there may be occasions when elected officials and candidates are invited or request to attend a function on a military installation, such visits must be approved and campaign related statements during such occasions are prohibited.

The following paragraphs are excerpts from the DOD Public Affairs Policy Guidance concerning political campaigns and elections.

Use of installation facilities by candidates:

Installation commanders will not permit the use of installation facilities by any candidate for political campaign or election events, including: public assemblies or town hall meetings, speeches, fund-raisers, press conferences, post-election celebrations, and concession addresses.

This policy does not prohibit members of congress and other elected officials from visiting military installations to receive briefings, tours or other official DOD information. Installation commanders will ensure that candidates who visit military installations to conduct official business do not engage in any political campaign or election activity during the visit.

The preceding prohibition does not apply to the president, the vice president, or the speaker of the House of Representatives. To avoid the appearance of preferential treatment, installation commanders should offer all candidates for national office who are not current members of congress or serving governmental officials the same access to installations as any other unofficial visitor.

Installation commanders should consult the office of the assistant secretary of defense for legislative affairs for guidance or instructions regarding specific visitation requests.

Media coverage of installation visits:

When an installation commander invites a candidate to an installation to participate in official business, and the media seeks to cover the event, the candidate may appear on camera and in photographs as an official participant, and may make a statement or answer questions about the official business being conducted.

Under no circumstances may a candidate receive approval to make a campaign or election-related statement or to respond to a campaign or election-related media query.

When an elected official arrives or departs a military installation via military aircraft, the installation commander will not authorize media coverage of the arrival or departure if the elected official's itinerary includes political campaign or election activity in the local community. The preceding prohibition does not apply to the president, the vice president, or the speaker of the House of Representatives.

When the president, vice president, or speaker of the house arrives or departs a military installation via military aircraft and part of that official's itinerary includes political campaign or election activity in support of a particular candidate, the installation commander will allow the media a photo opportunity to cover the arrival or departure of the president, vice president or speaker of the house.

Installation commanders anticipating a visit by the president, vice president, or speaker of the house that may involve political campaign or election activities should coordinate with OSD-LA and staff assistants planning the visit to ensure all concerned are aware of the provisions of DOD's public affairs policy guidance.

If questions arise, please contact a member of Public Affairs at 926-3127 or Debby Stone of the base legal office at 926-0868. The Office of Special Counsel is responsible for investigating reports or complaints and can be reached at 1-800-854-2824.

GUIDELINES FOR AIR FORCE MEMBERS

Composite sanding

On Sept. 18, in the C-17 hangar, I observed a tech cutting a fiberglass duct in the hangar using a cut off wheel. It created a large dust cloud. I talked to the C-17 Director and asked him if we had a down draft table or booth used for sanding. He stated he was working on it. He then said the tech had his respirator on. I asked what about everyone else? I was then told they should put on theirs also. I replied it needs to be done in a booth or with a vacuum system. He then turned and walked away. He did have the tech stop work after that.

How can a director not know the dangers of composite material and why don't we have some kind of vacuum system? I was also made to feel I was being a problem. I don't think bringing up a safety issue is a problem.

Colonel Carter's Response:

Thank you for your concern and for identifying this problem. This is the Voluntary Protection Program in action. As you mentioned, the director did stop the operation on the spot and is aware of the dangers associated with cutting composite material. The operation was moved to another location where adequate ventilation was available. All future work requiring cutting of composite material will be performed in a location that meets the ventilation requirements and is approved by the bioenvironmental office. The squadron director has also directed supervisors to brief each crew on the hazards of performing this task in the open hangar to ensure the operation will not take place in an unapproved location again.

Please continue to up-channel all safety issues or concerns you may have through your immediate supervisor and your wing leadership. Brig. Gen. Mark Atkinson is fully committed to making this industrial complex as safe as possible. Your input is critical as we continue our VPP journey.

Editor's Note: The Rev-Up will print an AFSO21 question-and-answer series the third Friday of every month. Questions may be e-mailed to the WR-ALCXP workflow with subject line marked AFSO21 question. Maj. Gen. Tom Owen, commander of the Warner Robins Air Logistics Center, will respond to AFSO21 questions.

Q: How does Air Force Smart Operations for the 21st Century really work outside of the production environment?

A: Virtually every aspect of AFSO21 can be applied to all areas of our business, not just industrial production and maintenance. The overarching theme of AFSO21 is to continuously improve by identifying and eliminating waste. Our history with AFSO21 at Robins has primarily focused on Lean and began with our production areas in 1999. We began to incrementally plant the Lean "seed" within the rest of the Air Logistics Center in 2002. As we continue to improve and build upon our successes and lessons learned we have learned the need to be more flexible as we select and apply our AFSO21 tools. What works for one process or product line may not work as well for another. We have a standard methodology that requires some level of understanding to know what to do and when. That is one of the reasons why our Center has more than 100 organic personnel trained as AFSO21 professionals to help guide us on our journey. These individuals, known as change managers and core team members, provide a valuable service and can offer training and advice to leaders and the general work force on the most efficient use of AFSO21 tools to get the maximum benefit. They are aligned with each wing and staff office at the Center. If you do not know who your AFSO21 professionals are, ask your supervisor. But I want everyone to remember the heart of AFSO21 is the freedom to use common sense methods to accomplish their jobs in the safest, most efficient way possible.

Air Force continues success in reducing energy impact

The mission of the Air Force is to deliver air power for the defense of America and its global interests, a mission that requires a rapid-response fighting force capable of flying and fighting in air, space and cyberspace anywhere at anytime.

Every October, the Air Force, along with the rest of the federal government, recognizes Energy Awareness Month. Our theme this year echoes our energy vision: "Making energy a consideration in all we do."

This vision serves as the foundation of our energy strategy:

► Reduce demand by increasing our energy efficiency and reducing our energy consumption.

► Increase supply by researching, testing and certifying new technologies.

► Investigating cutting edge uses of renewable and conventional sources of energy in order to create new domestic sources of supply.

► Change the culture to ensure energy is a consideration in all we do.

Energy, from JP-8 in our aircraft to electricity in our operation centers, powers our combat capability, allowing us to fly, fight and win our nation's wars. The Air Force consumed almost 2.6 billion gallons of aviation fuel in fiscal 2006 at a cost of almost $5.8 billion. Our total energy bill exceeded $7 billion when we include energy to operate our bases and fuel our ground vehicles.

We need to think about how energy is essential to this mission and our priorities of winning the war on terrorism, preparing for future conflicts and humanitarian missions, taking care of Airmen and recapitalizing and modernizing our air, space and cyberspace systems.

In his state of the union address last January, President Bush said, "For too long our nation has been dependent on foreign oil. And this dependence leaves us more vulnerable to hostile regimes and to terrorists who could cause huge disruptions in oil shipments, raise the price of oil and do harm to our economy."

The president challenged our nation to wean itself off its addiction to foreign oil.

To meet that challenge, we have been identifying new domestic sources of supply. In August, the B-52 Stratofortress fleet was certified to use a 50/50 blend of synthetic fuel and traditional JP-8. The C-17 Globemaster III is the next airframe we'll certify, and we're on course to certify the entire Air Force aircraft fleet by early 2011.

Much of our success is due to the innovation of Airmen at all levels of the Air Force. For example, officials at Dyess Air Force Base, Texas; Fairchild AFB, Wash.; and Minot AFB, N.D., acquire nearly 100 percent of their electrical energy requirements from renewable energy. In addition, 37 Air Force bases located in the United States procure green power.

By December 2007, the largest photovoltaic solar array in North America will be operating at Nellis AFB, Nev., providing 14 megawatts of power, enough to satisfy nearly 30 percent of the base's electricity needs, and saving the Air Force $1 million annually in energy costs.

As Air Force leadership continues to focus on energy, we remain mindful that energy use and environmental stewardship go hand in hand. We have linked our energy efforts with our continuing drive to reduce the environmental footprint of the Air Force.

Every month is Energy Awareness Month in the Air Force. In your squadrons, during mission planning, on the flightline, in the backshops and in your homes, focus on how you and your team can more effectively use energy. I encourage everyone in the Air Force to continue the great work you are doing to reduce our energy demand. We must continue to reduce our energy demand, identify and increase our domestic energy supply, and make energy a consideration in all we do.

There is more information on Energy Awareness Month on the Installations, Environment and Logistics Web site.

► IN BRIEF

WR-ALC COMMANDER'S CALL

The Warner Robins Air Logistics Center Commander, Maj. Gen. Tom Owen will host a series of Commander's Calls at the Warner Robins Civic Center Oct. 30 - Nov. 1.

The Commander's Call is mandatory for all center employees. Although the briefing is not mandatory for host units, associate commanders are welcome to attend.

Due to limited parking, bus transportation will be provided for all base employees. Limited handicap parking is available in front of the civic center. All other private vehicles are subject to being ticketed or towed at the owner's expense. Employees must have their base ID cards in order to ride busses exiting and entering the base. Bus and session schedules will be provided in the next Rev-up.

An interpreter for the hearing impaired will be present at session 3 only (2 p.m., Oct. 30). Organizations having hearing impaired personnel are asked to schedule those individuals accordingly. All base personnel are subject to search. Backpacks and bags are not allowed at the civic center.

For additional information, call Jimetta Strowder 222-0531 or Kimberly Clark 222-0532.

QUARTERLY AWARDS

Col. Theresa Carter, 78th Air

Base Wing commander, will host the 78th ABW 3rd Quarter Awards Ceremony Oct. 26 at 8 a.m. in the Enlisted Club Ballroom.

Outstanding civilian and military performers from the 78th ABW will be recognized.

Commanders, supervisors, family members, and friends are encouraged to attend. Show your unit's pride and spirit; come and join us in congratulating the troops for their stellar achievements. For more information, call Gayle Martin at 926-4940.

BLOOD DRIVE

The Armed Services Blood Program and the American Red Cross will host blood drives at Robins today.

Locations will include Armed Services Blood Program (Ft. Gordon):

► Youth Center 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

► Cotton Auditorium 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

American Red Cross (Mobile Unit):

► Headquarters Air Force Reserve Command Bldg. 210 8 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

► Bldgs. 640 and 645 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Donations made at this location will directly support our local community.

To schedule an appointment call 327-7931 or e-mail Staff Sgt. Garah Hammack at garah.hammack@robins.af.mil.

PERIMETER ROAD DETOUR

Perimeter Road near the Robins Aero Club will be detoured in order to accomplish road repairs Monday through Oct. 27. Perimeter Road near Bldg. 43 will be closed Nov. 9-12 to complete the project.

For more information, contact Tech. Sgt. Steven Rice at 327-8953 or Master Sgt. Rodney Summer-well at 327-8934.

TROOPS TO TEACHERS

Bill Kirkland, representative for the Troops to Teachers program, will be at the Robins Education Center today from 10 to 11 a.m. to take questions about the program that provides referral and placement assistance to those who have served in the Armed Forces and are seeking a second career as teachers in public schools.

The briefing will be in Bldg. 905, room 250, no reservations needed. For more information, contact Andrea Harris at 327-7312, or Mr. Kirkland at bill.kirkland@gapsc.com.

THRIFT SHOP NEWS

New items arrive weekly, including video games and gaming systems, household items and a nice selection of gently used clothing.

Don't forget to check out our uniform closet. We have a variety of current uniforms offered free of charge. We also welcome donations.

Hours of operation are Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Wednesdays from 3 to 6 p.m. and the first Saturday of every month from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

We accept consignments Wednesdays 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and 3 to 5:30 p.m., Fridays and the first Saturday of the month from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

VETERAN'S HOSPITAL TRIP

The 542nd Combat Sustainment Wing Advisory Council will sponsor a trip to the Veteran's Day program at the Veteran's Hospital in Dublin Nov. 11. Administrative leave of four hours will be permitted.

For more information contact Diane Nickels at diane.nickels@robins.af.mil.

CAMP WINGS

The Heart of Georgia Hospice will host a bereavement camp for children ages 6 to 16, who have lost a loved one, the first week in November. There is no cost for the camp other than a $10 registration fee. The camp will be held at Camp Martha Johnston in Lizella, Ga. For more information call the Heart of Georgia Hospice Family Support Services at 953-5161 ext. 121.

HALLELUJAH NIGHT

The Robins Chapel will host Hallelujah Night Oct. 31 from 5:30 to 8 p.m. There will be food and activities including a "Trunk or Treat" in the parking lot at 7:30 p.m. The chapel requests no scary costumes be worn. For more information call Marcia Little at 926-2821.

Robins gains 240 employees as DLA activates

BY AMY CLEMENT

Defense Supply Center Richmond Public Affairs

The Defense Logistics Agency gained 240 employees Oct. 15 when DLA-Warner Robins stood up here.

The "new" employees will provide supply, storage and distribution support to the maintenance activities for Warner Robins Air Logistics Center.

DLA activated the new detachment of its aviation supply and demand chain in response to 2005 Base Realignment and Closure supply and storage legislation. The BRAC 2005 decision called for the Department of Defense to reconfigure its supply, storage and distribution infrastructure into one integrated provider — DLA.

The activation of DLA-Warner Robins marks Air Force Materiel Command's first air logistics center to implement the BRAC mandate, with Air Force positions in the 702nd Maintenance Materiel Support Squadron transferring in place to DLA.

This is the first of 13 such supply, storage and distribution activations scheduled to take place over the next several years at all Air Force air logistics centers and aviation depots of other services. Similar transitions will take place at Air Force ALCs in February at Tinker Air Force Base, Okla., and in April at Hill AFB, Utah.

The combined deactivation/activation ceremony was held in the Museum of Aviation at Warner Robins Air Logistics Center. Brig. Gen. Andrew Busch, the commander of the Defense Supply Center Richmond, and Brig. Gen. Mark Atkinson, the commander of the 402nd Maintenance Wing, presided at the joint ceremony. General Atkinson and Joe Alexander, the director of the 702nd Materiel Support Squadron, officiated during the deactivation. General Busch and Col. Madeline Lopez, the first DLA-Warner Robins commander, officiated during the activation.

"This ceremony ends one era and begins a new era," General Atkinson said. "Often at ceremonies like this, where we furl and case the flag, the flag, the people and the mission go away — but not today. The people, mission and requirements stay. DOD transformation is ongoing and this transfer is part of the change."

General Atkinson told employees from the 702nd MSS they'd remain part of the team.

Breast Cancer Awareness Luncheon celebrates journey to survival

BY HOLLY L. BIRCHFIELD

hollybirchfield@robins.af.mil

Marcia Berlin, a registered dietitian and professional speaker with the National Speakers Association is a two-year breast cancer survivor.

The animated speaker shared her story, of how she was introduced to the disease that took her mother's life at a young age and changed her own life forever, with nearly 500 men and women at the 12th Annual Breast Cancer Awareness Luncheon, "The Pink Picnic," Oct. 16 at the Museum of Aviation's Century of Flight Hangar.

Mrs. Berlin said she made it through what she described as one of the defining moments of her life by taking the experience step-by-step.

"I want people to learn they can get the support they need, even when they think they can't, for anything they're going through," she said. "There are always resources to get the support that we need. Also, take things step-by-step because those two things are what helped me get through what I had to go through."

The guest speaker was one of several people who had a story to tell about breast cancer.

Seven breast cancer survivors modeled fashions provided by Belk Department Store during the luncheon, which was sponsored by the Health and Wellness Center at Robins, the Houston Healthcare, the American Cancer Society, and the Susan G. Komen Foundation 'Race for the Cure' in Central Georgia.

Ann Carter, a 53-year breast cancer survivor and model in the fashion show, said she hopes her story helped someone.

"I hope they'll be able to talk to other ladies and listen to other ladies who have survived (breast cancer) and know that there is always hope for them," she said.

Mrs. Carter, who was diagnosed with the disease at 16, said she came to the luncheon to offer encouragement.

"I think it's important to show the ladies that you can survive with the proper care and learning how to detect breast cancer," she said.

Women aren't the only ones joining in the fight though.

Jim Hunt, a retired Air Force major who is a minister of pastoral care at Sacred Heart Catholic Church, is a 40-year breast cancer survivor.

Getting the disease was a shock for Mr. Hunt.

"At that time, the idea of men having breast cancer was almost unheard of," he said. "So, when I developed a lump in my right breast, I didn't think that much of it. I thought it would go away, but it didn't. I ended up having a mastectomy."

Since his diagnosis, Mr. Hunt has discovered that more than 1,300 men are diagnosed with breast cancer each year and more than 400 men die of the disease yearly.

Mr. Hunt said he hopes his experience will help other men see breast cancer in a different light.

Bridget Zimmerman, HAWC director at Robins, said the luncheon has brought a much-needed awareness to a growing problem.

"It's to keep people aware that breast cancer is still out there and we still need to educate everyone about it," she said. "Women and men need to be aware of it and know how to check for the signs and symptoms of breast cancer."

Pumpkin Patrol volunteers needed

Robins will observe Halloween Oct. 31. Trick-or-treating hours are 6 to 8 p.m., in conjunction with the city of Warner Robins. Vehicle operators shall slow down during hours of trick or treating. Base housing personnel who are participating need to ensure an exterior light is on during these hours, while those not participating should leave exterior lights off. Security Forces and volunteers will increase the safety and security measures of the housing areas through their annual Halloween Pumpkin Patrol. Those interested in volunteering for this event should contact Tech. Sgt. Andrew Hixson at 222-1990 or e-mail, Andrew.hixson@robins.af.mil. Both military and civilians are welcome to volunteer. Volunteers need to be available from 5 to 8:30pm.

Halloween Safety Tips:

- Parents should accompany children at all times.
- Wear bright-colored clothes and well-fitting costumes that are breathable and masks that are easy to see through.

- Use reflective vests and/or belts when possible.
- Drivers should watch out for small children where trick or treaters visit.
- Parents should inspect all candy for children.
- Have children carry a flash light or glow stick while out.
- Stop only at familiar houses in your own neighborhood unless accompanied by an adult.
- Instruct children to always use sidewalks. Make sure kids know to stay in populated places.
- Ensure costumes are flame resistant.
- Costumes should be short enough to prevent tripping.
- Hats and scarves should be tied securely to prevent slipping over children's eyes.
- Swords and other costume accessories should be made of soft, flexible material.

Financial Management transformation to provide Airmen better, more accessible financial services

BY AMANDA CREELE
amanda.creele.ctr@robins.af.mil

The Air Force is undergoing a financial management transformation, which will create a centralized Air Force Financial Services Center.

The transformation will include a movement of work from Robins to Ellsworth Air Force Base, S.D. The first phase of the transformation, the processing function of documents, will be shifted to the center by major commands.

"It doesn't matter where the documents are processed as long as they are processed in a timely fashion and your folks are paid on time," Maurice Cullen, a member of the FM transformation team said.

Team Robins will make the transition for Phase I in April with the Air Force Materiel Command.

AFMC will be one of the last commands to make the transition allowing Robins and other AFMC bases to benefit from the trials and successes of the other commands.

"We will be watching them closely to make sure we are answering those challenges," said Lt. Col. Kevin Smagh, commander of the 78th Comptroller Squadron.

During Phase I, Airmen will still be able to visit their local financial services office for face-to-face communication about any issues with their pay or travel expenses.

Phase II will begin Oct. 1 and will include the full-service contact center, which will be available 24 hours a day, seven days a week by phone or computer. As part of Phase II bases will lose part of their man power to the new customer service center at Ellsworth AFB. During Phase II, Robins personnel will still drop off documents to the Robins financial services office who will forward them to the center at Ellsworth AFB, but all questions and customer service issues should be routed through the call center.

"We are going to be responsible for making sure all the documents are there at Ellsworth for them to process," said Cheryl McNeil-Jordan, financial services officer.

Once the second phase of the transformation begins, Major Cullen stressed the importance of using the call center at Ellsworth AFB because failing to do so would put undue stress on the financial management staff remaining at Robins.

Presently, financial services has 39 employees and after the transformation is complete the end strength will be eight.

"The local wing is going to have a hard time handling more than they are supposed to," Major Cullen said.

The center will provide the highest quality in financial services for all Airmen regardless of duty station because standard processes, policies and guidelines will be implemented for all.

"The challenge is to be able to design that contact center, so that it is logical and can provide the same level of service," Colonel Smagh said.

The center will affect active-duty Airmen and reservists and will allow the financial career field to utilize resources more effectively.

"The mission of the finance office doesn't change," said Major Cullen, adding it will only affect the way in which the mission is achieved.

The result will be the ability to better serve Airmen, but will also free up resources for other Air Force missions such as the acquisition of new aircraft, weapon systems and other needed tools and equipment.

"The industry does it to save money and we do it to provide more capability to our warfighter," Major Cullen said.

One of the concerns expressed about the FM transformation was the availability of a financial management representative to assist Airmen returning from deployment. But Colonel Smagh has assured base leadership that the deployment responsibility would remain here with the Robins personnel.

Master Sgt. Tony Cater, first sergeant of the 54th Combat Communications Squadron, was pleased with the plans for the FM transformation and is confident it will be an asset to all Airmen in the long run.

Sergeant Cater did express some concerns about the adjustment period to the new financial management process.

Master Sgt. DeWanna McKinney, first sergeant for the 19th Operation Support Squadron and 99th Air Refueling Squadron, was convinced the new approach to financial management will work, but felt it would take some time getting use to.

One issue she was concerned with was the ability of the local financial management representatives to keep the case management responsibility.

Coming together: Men's lunchtime fellowship celebrates five years of encouragement, brotherhood at Robins

holly.birchfield@robins.af.mil

For five years, a men's lunchtime fellowship has offered inspiration and encouragement to those who share a common bond – their faith in God.

Gregory Hendricks, a minister at First Baptist Church on Garmon Street in Warner Robins and a retired Air Force member, started the group at Robins in October 2002 to encourage and empower men.

What started as a small lunchtime meeting of about eight men on Tuesdays has now grown into a group of more than 20.

Mr. Hendricks, who was stationed at Robins from 1996 to 2000 and has worked closely with the Base Chapel, said the ministry plays an important role in men's lives.

"We try to lift and encourage each other on issues we face as men that may not sometimes be talked about in a normal church or normal setting," he said.

Those issues include the community, their jobs and families.

The first Tuesday of each month is set aside for fasting and praying. The men pray over issues they currently face. Other Tuesdays, the men eat and discuss topics addressed in the inspirational videos of Bishop T.D. Jakes, which offer biblical scripture related to the topic at hand.

Mr. Hendricks said the fellowship gives men a place to relax.

"Sometimes men don't have a place to go as an outlet to deal with men's issues," he said. "Even in a normal church setting with women there and children there, it's not always something geared strictly to men. We try to have stuff here that men go through. We can come in here and vent and talk about what we want to talk about to help one another out."

Johnny Kirk, a project manager for Upper Mohawk Inc. who works as a contractor at Robins and attends church with Mr. Hendricks, began attending the fellowship four years ago.

"It's just a wonderful opportunity for men to get together and talk about issues and pray together," he said. "It's just an inspiration and motivation for me each Tuesday. It gives me that spiritual growth I need after Sunday."

Robert McGraw, a retired chief master sergeant who has been part of the fellowship for nearly three years, said it was his curiosity about Mr. Hendricks' joy in being a Christian that drew him to the group. Once he came, he was hooked.

Booker T. Bledsoe, center, takes communion at the Men's Ministry Oct. 9. The ministry has been meeting on base for five years.

Mr. McGraw said being able to share what he goes through with others and knowing they'll be there to lift him up is one of the best aspects of the fellowship.

The men's fellowship has meant a lot its founder as well.

"It has just been a blessing to see how God has blessed it for five years," Mr. Hendricks said. "When we started it, I would have never thought it would've lasted this long. To go around town and be at Wal-mart and listen to the testimony of guys who come in here and how it's changed their lives and to even run into their wives and their wives tell me how it's changed their relationship, it's just blessed me."

What to know: The men's lunchtime fellowship meets each Tuesday from 11 a.m. to noon at the Base Chapel Annex. The fellowship is open to all men in the Robins community. For more information, call Gregory Hendricks at 923-2749.

materiel support will be another area inspected during the ORI. Areas such as the 330th Aircraft Sustainment Wing, the 402nd Maintenance Wing, and the 542nd Combat Sustainment Wing may be tested on how well they handle aircraft repair issues in the field.

Other areas, such as safety and the Special Interest Items Program, may undergo a targeted compliance inspection during the ORI.

The inspection is similar to the Unit Compliance Inspection Robins faced in 2006.

"While the team is here, they'll look at some issues they've had, things that are highlighted across the command in certain areas," he said. "They'll also have a major emergency management exercise during this time. That could be anything from a natural disaster to a terrorist-related (incident) to an aircraft crash. Just about anything could happen (and) you don't know what to expect on that either."

Inspectors will gauge how well Robins responds to whatever is tossed its way, Mr. Johnson said. An advanced team of about six people from the Headquarters AFMC/IG office will arrive Nov. 15 to meet commanders and be on hand to answer questions about the ORI.

"It's a way for them to become familiar and see the area where we do our Phase II, our war exercises, (and) show them where they'll be working out of," he said. "Then, they'll entertain some questions from our organizations and leadership and try to clarify some of the inspection criteria."

Mr. Carson said the inspection team will rate Robins on a scale from outstanding to unsatisfactory. Robins should receive its rating before the team departs.

The inspection is very important to Robins, Sergeant Geister said.

"The ORI is very important to test the 78th ABW to make sure they're mission-ready to go out and deploy in support of any contingency across the world," he said. "To be ready for an ORE and an ORI is to really play it as if it were real."

Being operationally ready is only one part of gearing up for the ORI, said Mr. Johnson.

"One of the biggest things to be successful in any type of inspection like this is your attitude," he said. "Maintain a positive attitude. Make sure you look at the requirements for your area and what you're going to be inspected on. Never give up. Be creative if you need to."

Colonel Warren Berry, 78th ABW vice commander, said he's certain Robins will step up to the ORI challenge.

"Are we ready?" he said. "We will be, and our Air Logistics Center team will rise to the occasion to impress the socks off the IG. I believe the IG will validate what we already know. We are deployment focused. We are warfighter focused and we are mission ready."

DLA

"You're still part of the family and our commitment to warfighters and customers will continue, and I look forward to the years ahead," he said.

"The success of the 402nd Maintenance Wing is largely built on the supply and support (702nd MSS members) provided," General Busch said.

The DLA-Warner Robins detachment will be managed by DLA's aviation supply chain, DSCR, based in Richmond, Va.

"This is Day 1, and our focus is to ensure uninterrupted support to General Atkinson's maintenance line. Work will continue, as is/where is," General Busch said. "We're also identifying what we'll do on Day 2, which is not a date, but a condition of fail safe support to the maintenance wing as we move through the transformation DOD is asking us to do."

Throughout the transition process, several town hall meetings were held to keep affected employees informed about the transition.

"The communication with us was very good," said John Ricks, one of the employees who transferred to DLA. "The initial concern was that of being anxious and not knowing what to expect. But now that it is here, it's kind of invisible and it has gone smooth so far. People are doing the same functions; we're just working for DLA instead of the Air Force."

recruiting strong young men and women, then developing them immediately through education and training.

"We do a very good job of giving our Airmen solid training, developing them and their technical skills for their job. We work hard to ensure we are properly taking care of them and their families," he said.

Chief McKinley said the Air Force's professional military education programs are outstanding in developing the Airmen and preparing them to do their jobs. "That goes from airman leadership school to NCO academies to senior NCO academies to the chief's leadership course and several other courses we have in between to make sure we develop our Airmen throughout their career," he said.

The third priority for the Air Force is recapitalization and modernization of our air, space and cyberspace systems.

"We need to develop and recapitalize our Air Force. Right now, we have the oldest aircraft in our inventory that we've ever had. Our aircraft average around 24 years of age and that is just too old," Chief McKinley said. "Our number one priority for recapitalization modernization for our Air Force is to replace the aging tanker fleet. The number two priority in recapitalization is to develop and buy a new combat search and rescue helicopter. The number three priority is to replace all space assets we have because the equipment we have in orbit right now is old. The number four priority is to get the new Joint Strike Fighter, the F-35, on board to replace our aging F-16s, and our fifth priority is to develop a new long-range strike bomber."

Those who were able to hear the chief speak appreciated his comments.

"I thought it was an outstanding visit," said Tech. Sgt. Daniel Pacheco, flight instructor at NCO Academy. "It was great to see a senior leader take the time out of his busy schedule to visit us, it says a lot about Chief McKinley."

Tech. Sgt. Janna Wesley was also impressed with the chief.

"Everyone was excited that Chief McKinley was here," she said. "And they were surprised at how down to earth he is. His responses to questions were real — not the typical Air Force responses you'd expect from a senior enlisted leader. I'd really like to see him return to Robins soon."

The chief said he is proud of all the Airmen who volunteer to serve their country.

"It's truly an incredible honor to meet incredible Airmen and their families all over the world," he said. "Our Air Force is accomplishing amazing missions and our Airmen are the ones who make it happen."

Therapy dogs lend an ear to Robins Elementary students

BY AMANDA CREEL
amanda.creel.ct@robins.af.mil

For many students reading out loud in class to their peers can be an overwhelming experience, where students dread making a mistake in front of their classmates.

This is why Beverly Kile, the reading teacher at Robins Elementary, jumped at the opportunity to bring therapy dogs into the classroom to help her students practice their oral reading skills without the pressure of impressing their peers.

"They read aloud to them and improve their oral reading. They are more relaxed because the dogs aren't critical," Ms. Kile said.

The opportunity for the dogs to join the Robins Elementary reading program was made possible by Therapups of Central Georgia through the Paws for Reading program, which is designed to help improve literacy using registered therapy dogs.

It was one of the Therapup handlers, who also works at Robins as the Combat Talon flight chief with the 572nd Aircraft Sustainment Squadron, Donna Hartnett, who asked the base elementary school if they would be interested in using the therapy dogs in the classroom.

Ms. Hartnett said her favorite part of the program is that it allows students to practice their reading in a non-critical environment.

"They don't criticize me and they are really cute, and they help me out with my reading a lot," said Peyton Baskerville, 11.

The therapy dogs joined the Robins Elementary students for three weeks Monday through Thursday lending an ear as the students completed their 20 minutes of independent reading each day.

"I have seen a big difference in their reading and even some parents have told us they have noticed a difference too," Ms. Kile said.

Peyton agreed that her own reading has improved since the dogs started visiting their classroom three weeks ago.

"Now I am reading chapter books and before I was reading little small books," she said.

The students chose some of their favorite books to read to their canine friends.

"Flynn is the dog I read to the most. I just like reading with him. I read the 'Magnificent Mummy' to Flynn. I choose that book because I am interested in ancient Egypt," said Salaam Goins, 10.

Salaam said he too thinks his reading has improved.

"I do less stuttering," he said.

Students involved in the program are thrilled with the opportunity to interact with the dogs and many of the students have a favorite therapy dog they always want to read to.

"She lays on my lap. Her name is Nora and she doesn't correct you if you mess up on a word," said Dylan Fiveash, 11.

"When Flynn first came out. She (Ms. Hartnett) taught us his tricks. He can do high fives," Peyton said. "Flynn gives you a high-five every time he's done reading."

Amy St. Clair, Nora's handler, said one of the most impressive things about the program is, "We become invisible when they are reading to the dog. They just become absorbed in reading to the dog," she said.

Ms. Hartnett agreed and said anything that can be done to help children gain more self-confidence is a great thing.

She said, "Dogs are good listeners and allowing the students to read to them without any distractions builds self-confidence."

Along with helping the students improve their reading skills, the students also get an opportunity to learn how to handle the dogs and are given the opportunity to test the dogs training through drills and by practicing their tricks with them.

Ms. Hartnett, Flynn's handler, said the program also helps children who are timid or afraid of dogs learn to interact with them without being scared.

Youth center football team to play in championships

BY KENDAHL JOHNSON
kendahl.johnson@robins.af.mil

For the first time in three years, the Robins Youth Center 11- and 12-year-old tackle football team has a winning record and is making the most of it. The young players have made it all the way to the championship game.

The Falcons are 8-1 and are in the title game. They have a tough challenge ahead; they face a Perry team that hasn't been defeated yet this season. The teams will clash Saturday at 4:30 p.m. at the McConnell-Talbert Stadium in Warner Robins.

Staff Sgt. Roosevelt Marks of the 5th Combat Communications Group has been the head coach for the young team, but a deployment caused him to miss the post-season. His assistant Earl Billingsley, whose son Ja'que plays middle linebacker and center, is filling in.

Billingsley said if his team plays to its potential, it has a good chance of winning on Saturday.

"This is a great accomplishment. I'm so proud of the boys," he said. "We started practicing after all the other teams so they're just starting to gel."

To make it to the final game, the Robins team defeated the Warner Robins Oilers 18-0 in the playoffs. The two teams were scoreless at the half, but an inspired halftime message from the coach motivated the team to score three second half touchdowns.

"Some of our players looked like they just woke up. I had to get them fired up and get some fire in their eyes," Billingsley said. "I challenged them and motivated them to play their best and give it their all in the second half."

Ron Hayes, youth sports and fitness director, said a combination of coaching and good talent helped propel the team forward. He said he is proud of the youth sports program at Robins.

"Our coaches try to teach more than sports fundamentals," he said. "They try to instill values, like responsibility and dedication. They emphasize attitude and education. They try to incorporate a lot of life lessons with these young kids."

AF skeet team takes world championship

Pull! The command was shouted thousands of times from Oct. 3-13 where the Air Force dominated the 2007 World Skeet Championships as more than 1,700 competitors from around the world gathered at the event in Northwest San Antonio.

Among military teams, Air Force Team One took first place in every gauge, 12 gauge, 20 gauge, 28 gauge and .410 bore, while Air Force Team Two came in second.

Skeet, a competitive target shooting sport, was invented in the U.S. in the 1920s by hunters who wanted to improve their aim for hunting season.

Today, both hunters and non-hunters around the globe are drawn to skeet ranges where they fire at clay objects, called pigeons, hurled in the air in a crisscross pattern.

The modern skeet competition consists of eight different shooting stations and offers a variety of fast-flying targets that take flight from many challenging directions.

Air Force Team One won the five person military team championship with 2,701 targets hit out of 2,750. The sharpshooters missed only 49 targets while Air Force Team Two hit 2,631 targets.

The Air Force squad is divided into two five-person teams. Team one includes Lt.

Col. Rick Davis, from Sheppard Air Force Base, Texas; Capt. Brian Moore, from Nellis AFB, Nev.; Master Sgt. Stuart Brown (team captain), from Seymour Johnson AFB, N.C.; Master Sgt. John Barnes, from Malmstrom AFB, Mont.; and Master Sgt. Mike Geise, from the Pentagon.

Team two includes Lt. Col. Vernon Lucas (overall team captain), from Ramstein Air Base, Germany; Master Sgt. Eric Agney from Scott AFB, Ill.; Master Sgt. John Yanick, from Shaw AFB, S.C.; Staff Sgt. Reid Beveridge, from Offutt AFB, Neb.; and Staff Sgt. Jesse Caldwell, from Nellis AFB.—Air Force News
