ROBINS AFTER DARK

This edition of the Robins Rev-Up sheds some light on what happens at Robins after most employees have gone home. Whether it's the hardworking folks who work through the night, or just the people who live on base, this issue is designed to provide a look at what goes on inside the gates after dark.

Team Robins military rolls to be trimmed in FY13

BY RICK BREWER

78th Air Base Wing Public Affairs

The Air Force has announced that Robins will lose a total of 83 military authorizations and one additional civilian authorization as part of the service's fiscal 2013 budget request.

The Air Force said in early February that it would request to trim its military end strength in 2013 by more than 9,000, but said only that the reductions would involve active duty, guard and reserve Airmen. Most civilian reductions were previously announced. On Tuesday, it offered more details about the changes (see related article at www.robins.af.mil).

Most of the authorizations at Robins are active duty positions in the 461st Air Control Wing and the Band of the U.S. Air Force Reserve.

The positions in the 461st ACW are tied to the loss of one Joint STARS E-8C, which the service has requested to retire in 2013 because the aircraft is "damaged beyond economical repair." Individuals impacted will be reassigned in the active duty Air Force through the normal assignment process.

AFMC creates reorganization governance structure

AIR FORCE MATERIEL COMMAND PUBLIC AFFAIRS

WRIGHT-PATTERSON AIR FORCE BASE, Ohio – Air Force Materiel Command is using a dedicated process to guide the command's planned restructure from 12 centers to five.

According to a charter approved by AFMC Commander Gen. Donald Hoffman, the AFMC Reorganization Implementation Governance Structure guides the development, coordination, integration, tracking and monitoring of milestones for the reorganization.

It also implements the actions, decisions and products necessary to ensure the restructure moves toward initial operational capability by Oct. 1, and full operational capability by mid-2013.

"Achieving the five-center construct's initial operational capability will require dedicated leadership and a team effort," said Lt. Gen. C.D. Moore II, AFMC vice commander. "Restructuring the command with no interruption to normal mission execution is essential, but it's a daunting task. This tiered governance structure will ensure we plan effectively toward a unified, coordinated manner."

The top tier is the AFMC Council, chaired by Hoffman and consisting of headquarters directors and the command's center commanders.

Directly under the Council is the Executive Steering Group, chaired by Moore.

Below the ESG, five center team leads will be responsible for achieving operational capability of their respective centers.

"The majority of our focus is on Center Team Leads identifying, resolving and codifying critical pathways, issues, interdependencies and processes," Moore said.

Improving quality of life

Annual forum focuses on family, health topics

BY JENNY GORDON
jenny.gordon.ctr@robins.af.mil

About 125 members of Team Robins – including spouses – attended Robins’ annual Caring for People Forum on March 2.

“It went very well. There was a lot of positive energy,” said Maj. Philip Bascom, Integrated Delivery Services System chair. “It’s always good to step back from the daily routine and look at quality of life issues. With strong support from senior leadership, we can try to resolve those issues.”

The forum began by reviewing topics from last year’s event.

Availability of low-cost, healthy eating choices and fitness ideas were among the topics discussed.

This year’s topics, discussed by nine working groups, included family support, Guard and Reserve support, housing, spouse communication, health and wellness, single Airmen, special needs family member support and deployment support.

A few ideas developed from the forum included additional communication about available family programs, after-school tutoring and single Airmen activities.

The annual event brings together Robins leaders, service and support providers, family members and volunteers for one day to improve service and support programs available to Robins Airmen and their families.

Robins AFAF campaign kicks off

BY JENNY GORDON
jenny.gordon.ctr@robins.af.mil

The 2012 Robins Air Force Assistance Fund Campaign kicked off March 5. It will run through April 13.

This year’s theme is “Commitment to Caring, with an installation goal of $85,361.

Unit project officers and key workers will be working hard to make 100 percent contact with all military and retired members during the first two weeks of the six-week campaign.

“This is about being good wingmen and giving back to those who have come before us,” said Col. Mitchel Butikofer, installation commander. “We have to take care of the day-to-day needs of our Airmen.”

The AFAF includes four charities: the LeMay Foundation, Air Force Enlisted Village, Air Force Villages Charitable Foundation and the Air Force Aid Society – the official charity of the Air Force. The Robins AFAS office provides assistance through the Airmen & Family Readiness Center in Bldg. 794. In 2011, the it awarded $124,560 in emergency assistance through loans and grants, as well as community programs and education opportunities. A final AFAF Campaign recognition celebration will be conducted April 18 at the Base Chapel annex.

Robert Cleveland, Defense Logistics Agency transportation motor vehicle operator, unloads a truck. Cleveland is one of the many employees who work night shifts at Robins.

Robert Cleveland works a 1 to 10 p.m. shift unloading and loading trucks and driving across base delivering goods. “I do this all night long. I enjoy my job, and I like driving – and being left alone, that’s why I work nights,” said Cleveland. Cleveland’s routine includes operating a switch to roll equipment to the back of his truck, then using a forklift to maneuver items into a warehouse.

There are more than 100 steps to climb across seven levels to reach the top of Robins' air traffic control tower. There is no elevator. Once at the top, computer screens, phones, log books, radios, control switches and other mechanical devices on desks assist workers who keep a close watch on inbound and outbound aircraft. A small refrigerator and food sit at one corner, an "important element" explain workers – rarely does anyone want to make the trip down and up the stairs again.

A number of screens monitor operations; a main radar screen depicts air space and movement of aircraft approaching and leaving the base.

Since shifts rotate each week, a favorite is the night shift for Troy Hundley, tower air traffic watch supervisor.

"We don't have a lot of flying in the morning.

Most occur in late afternoons or early evenings," said Hundley. "I like actually talking to an airplane now and then."

"A lot of people depend on what we do, especially when it comes to production," says Sid Brown, boiler plant operator in the steam/chill water plant building at Robins.

Three boiler plant operators work the owl shift from midnight to 8 a.m. in Bldg. 177, as well as one worker in Bldg. 644. The building consists of a steam side and a chill side, which basically supplies heating needs across the installation.

On the chill side, Glenn Gulley monitors seven chillers on computers throughout the evening. He checks out such things as the water temperature and water pressure, as well as the outside air temperature – all of which play an important part in the system working at peak efficiency.

Boiler operators also work steadily through the night keeping a close eye on the amount of steam being put out and water levels.

Marketing yourself for a second career

The Robins Airman and Family Readiness Center, in Bldg. 794, is sponsoring a lecture March 15 from 1 to 3:30 p.m. regarding career management and civilian transition.

It will be presented by the Military Officers Association of America, and is titled "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career."

Civilian transition is ultimately a part of all military careers. Therefore, the lecture is designed for those contemplating retirement in one to five years.

Regardless whether an officer or senior enlisted member has reached the point of being in transition, he or she should be educated about the process in order to mentor and counsel those who work for them and are contemplating or going through their own transitions.

Retired Air Force Col. Brian Anderson, MOAA National Staff deputy director of transition services will be the speaker. The presentation is given annually at more than 150 military installations. It includes comprehensive information on the decision to retire, employer perceptions, the competition, resumes, job search, career fairs, interview techniques, and other relevant and important transition topics.

The presentation is geared toward officers and senior enlisted, but all ranks are welcomed. Spouses are also encouraged to attend. All who attend will receive a free copy of the lecture's companion book, also titled "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career." It's an in-depth resource for the transition process.

For more information and to sign up, contact the Airman and Family Readiness Center at (478) 926-1256.

AFMC

The AFMC restructure was announced Nov. 2, 2011, as part of several Air Force efficiency efforts.

The restructure will cut overhead costs and redundant layers of center headquarters staffs, and is expected to generate Air Force savings equal to $109 million annually. It will improve AFMC's overall management of the Air Force's research and development, test and evaluation, life cycle management and sustainment of weapon systems and nuclear support. It will allow AFMC to provide better support to the warfighter and use taxpayer dollars more efficiently.

In making the restructure announcement, Hoffman said, "We owe it to the warfighter and the American taxpayer. In these times of tight budgets, our success will depend on a fundamental change in culture across our command. This is an opportunity to do things better and replace a culture of perceived endless money with one of efficiency, savings and restraint."

ROBINS

The positions in the Band of the U.S. Air Force Reserve are being eyed for elimination because Air Force plans call for the unit to be deactivated, also in 2013. Airmen currently assigned to the band would be reassigned to other active duty bands, according to Air Force Reserve Command officials.

In all, the service plans to eliminate 5,100 guard, 3,900 active duty and 900 reserve authorizations.

It's all part of the Air

Force's effort to align the force with the Defense Department's new defense strategy.

It's also aimed at helping the Air Force do its part to help DoD trim $487 billion from its budget over the next 10 years, which the department is required to do by the Budget Control Act.
